

STANLEY CARROLL APPAREL

by Amy Hough

When Stanley Carroll, a judge for the Concrete Design Awards, was asked to provide a biography on himself this is what he presented:

"When Stanley was young he wanted to be a fireman. When he got older Stanley wanted to be a chef on a cruise ship. Instead, Stanley became a clothing designer and still doesn't know why he does this."

Whatever his reasons, Stanley Carroll's premiere showing of his spring and summer line met wide approval from an eager crowd of fashion dilettantes. Carroll's nonchalant casualness was reflected in his designs which depicted cool and comfortable fashion. Eccentricities did surface with empire waisted pants for men and wire mesh shirts. Carroll, a strong advocator of skirts for men, also displayed a selection of sarongs specifically designed for the masculine adventurer.

Photo credit Mario Pietronale

Photo credit Amy Hough

Photo credit Amy Hough

Photo credit Mario Pietronale

Photo credit Amy Hough